In response to the postponement of Carnival Virgin Islands on St. Thomas due to the coronavirus pandemic, the U.S. Virgin Islands Department of Tourism's Division of Festivals has launched 'Home Wuk', online social gatherings designed to create a sense of community, camaraderie and a "virtual" Carnival experience, the Department of Tourism said Wednesday.

The series, which was developed to help meet the need for people to focus on matters other than the global health crisis, premiered at a time when Virgin Islanders would have been gearing up for Carnival celebrations, which were scheduled for April 3 to May 4, 2020.

"We know everyone was looking forward to Carnival, but postponing it was the right thing to do to make sure we help stop the virus from spreading," said Ian Turnbull, director of the Division of Festivals. "With the 'Home Wuk' series, we can lift people's spirits and bring the VI Carnival vibe to everyone in the safety of their homes."

The first 'Home Wuk' party was held on Saturday, and was hosted on DJ Avalanche's and division's Facebook pages in collaboration with Insomniacs J'ouvert Troupe. The event featured the DJ Avalanche, dubbed "The Caribbean's Hottest DJ".

For almost two and a half hours, DJ Avalanche served up energizing, feel-good music from the Virgin Islands and the region. The online event attracted more than 63,000 views and nearly 1,500 shares.

One viewer stated: "Nice concept, I love the virtual jam!" while another commented: "We jamming from far, social distance."

During the live show, DJ Avalanche hammered out the importance of following the recommended public health guidelines during the coronavirus pandemic. "You gotta be careful on the street. Make sure you have your mask, make sure you wash your hands, make sure you stay safe."

The Division of Festivals said it continues to develop initiatives to promote the territory's culture and heritage, and will share its plans for rescheduling Carnival, St. John Celebration and other cultural events once the crisis has subsided.

The next 'Home Wuk' events will take place on Wednesday, April 1, and Saturday, April 4 at 8 p.m., in partnership with Ubersoca Cruise.
