

The Virgin Islands Consortium

The Reasons Why JFL Is Facing Decertification Again

Health / Published On December 01, 2016 01:18 PM /

Ernice Gilbert December 01, 2016

ST. CROIX -- The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid issued a letter dated Tuesday to Juan F. Luis Hospital and Medical Center Acting CEO Richard Evangelista, warning the hospital that it would face decertification if it did not come into compliance with CMS standards for participation by December 9. CMS said it would end its current agreement with JFL by February 27 if the hospital does not comply.

In a 12-page report, CMS listed a myriad of deficiencies at the hospital, including problems with air-conditioning, mold and wet ceiling tiles. In August, The Consortium spoke with 8 employees of JFL's hemodialysis unit, who were staging a sit-out because of what they described as an overabundance of mold affecting their department, which is on the first floor. Some said they'd gotten sick because of the mold. They also said that the situation had deteriorated and stood the risk of affecting some 72 patients that they tended to regularly.

View the original embedded media

A day after The Consortium's report, JFL canceled dialysis patient cases so that a contractor could work to rectify the problem.

"They keep changing the tiles and in no time the tiles are saturated again. [The tiles] drop down, they put more and the process continues," said one employee, describing the bandaid-like approach the hospital had taken towards the problem.

"The tiles cave in so often it's not funny. Even in the break room you're not safe. You're eating and tiles would just collapse," said another employee, while yet another made mention of the hemodialysis unit's medication room being at risk because of the ongoing problems.

The 12-page CMS report said, "There was potential for any patient or staff member to get injured from slips/falls, and injuries from falling materials, and exposure to/or acquiring fungal infections that enter the hospital from the front door, hemodialysis unit, emergency room, employee entrance, and patient hallways on all units."

CMS said JFL failed to ensure that hospital-wide quality assessment and performance improvement efforts addressed facility maintenance and building improvements; a failure CMS says directly impacted patient care and safety. The hospital also failed to preserve the environment of care relative to air-conditioning.

CMS found soiled vents in JFL's surgical units 16 times, 12 times in the medical unit, 22 times in the postpartum unit and 4 times in the E.R.

If J.F.L. does not come into compliance by December 9, C.M.S. will cease to make Medicare and Medicaid reimbursements, a move that could be catastrophic for the hospital and the wider St. Croix economy.

On September 19, 2014, J.F.L. announced that it had lost its accreditation status. Back then, decertification was attributed to multiple problems; most pointedly, however, was the facility's budget being halved from about $33 million in 2008 to about $17 million in 2014. The budget cuts had forced J.F.L. to cut back in key departments, producing a chain reaction leading to the lack of staff to perform critical tasks, nursing deficiencies and other problems.

In a letter addressed to Senate President Neville James on Wednesday, Governor Kenneth Mapp asked that the Senate move swiftly on his $260 million capital projects measure, and asked that lawmakers increase the line item for hospital repairs from $10 million to $20 million. In November, the governor signed into law a $247 million working capital bill, $147 million of which was to be used for government operations, including $25 million for the territory's hospitals.

The approval would mean floating more bonds for a government already laden with debt and suffering with a junk status credit rating — which makes interest rates higher.

“In light of the deadline to avert termination set by CMS, I urge the members of the 31st Legislature to act on my capital projects plan and to favorably consider my request to increase the line item amount to our hospitals from $10,000,000 to an amount not to exceed $20,000,000,” wrote Mr. Mapp. “I know there is no need for me to explain the catastrophic result of any of our hospitals losing their certification by the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services.”

© Viconsortium 2026