The Center for Educational Growth (CFEG), the USVI's first local online school certified by the Department of Education has officially opened for registration for the Fall Semester, a release issued Monday has made known.

The CFEG's online educational program was created and founded by local educators - Sandra Cannon, Leah Messer, and Moordale Bryan. These local educators each have over 30 years of in-person experience as well as over 7 years of virtual class experience with online modules such as Apex Courseware, Edmentum Courseware, and Ascellus Courseware. They've also recruited and trained additional educators to ensure that each student receives the necessary amount of individual attention while maintaining safety as well as a challenging and engaging learning experience, according to the release.

The release said throughout the Covid-19 pandemic, CFEG has been proving virtual education works. It successfully completed it's summer online education program supported by the community and sponsored by the Department of Sports Park and Recreation. As a non-profit corporation devoted to educating the young people of the Virgin Islands, CFEG is excited to continue to provide educational services during COVID-19 and for all students in need of immediate learning instruction.

The Center for Educational Growth serves students in grades 9-12. Registration is open now for 2020 – 2021 school year. Classes begin on August 17th. To learn more about The Center for Educational Growth visit their website here or call Sandra Cannon (813) 947-9584.
