ST. CROIX – The Danish Emergency Management Agency (DEMA) has pledged its support to Lutheran Social Services of the Virgin Islands after Hurricane Maria damaged four roofs at Flamboyant Gardens, a 56 apartment complex for low-income seniors and persons with physical disabilities, the nonprofit made known via release Friday.

A few days after Hurricane Maria, extensive rains filled the debris-clogged gut that runs through Queen Louise Home for Children's campus -causing extensive flooding at Sister Emma Cottage, the residence for children who are medically fragile and have severe disabilities, according to Lutheran Services.

DEMA equipped thirteen apartments with temporary tarps after it was determined by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers that the community was ineligible for assistance through Operation Blue Roof. The Danish agency has also agreed to help Queen Louise Home for Children by re-grading the gut that runs through the campus to prevent future flooding to the residence.

The individuals who worked at Flamboyant Gardens considered their experience "humbling", and even felt embarrassed at the numerous compliments and words of gratitude they received. They expressed their deep sense of duty and were simply happy to "fill any void in manpower due to the hurricanes." The group is made up of employees and volunteers from different backgrounds- including mechanics, nursing, marketing, construction and engineering. The DEMA personnel, who leave the islands on December 16th, have found the rich Danish roots in St. Croix fascinating and coined their experience as "coming back home" to the Virgin Islands.

This assistance is a continuation of overwhelming Danish support for Lutheran Social Services of the Virgin Islands. Earlier this year, the Consulate General of New York through the Danish Ministry of Culture made a grant award of DKK 178,000 (approximately USD 28,000) to Queen Louise Home for Children as part of the Danish marking of the 100-year commemoration of Transfer Day.
