UVI Updates Sexual Harassment Policy to Fall in Line With U.S. D.O.E. Changes

The University of the Virgin Islands took steps to fall in line with the U.S. Dept. of Education's amendments to title IX of the Education Act of 1972, which states that no person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving federal assistance. Title IX applies to all educational institutions that receive federal funds. The Office of Civil Rights of the United States Department of Education (US DOE) enforces Title IX regulations.

UVI Board Attorney Marie Thomas Griffith said changes to the policy, mandated by Title IX, included changes to the definition of sexual harassment, the hearing process, the formal complaint structure, kinds of responses to the accused and due process in regard to the accused.

FirstBank Notifies Clients of Security Occurrence

FirstBank on Saturday said it detected a security occurrence in its systems Friday, which the bank said impacted several of its service channels.

The occurrence did not impact customer accounts, and the bank's senior vice president and USVI business director, Valdamier Collens, said everything is being done to reinstate services expeditiously.

“We are working diligently to fix this problem and restore our services as soon as possible. This occurrence did not impact the safety of our customers deposits,” Mr. Collens said.
