Governor Albert Bryan has vetoed a revised version of what he calls a “special interest” bill the governor previously vetoed. Both measures were sponsored by Senator Kurt Violet, though the latest bill seeks to reduce from 400 to 75 the number of people a required banquet hall must facilitate as part of the Caravelle Hotel casino’s existing license. The first bill sought to eliminate the requirement for a banquet hall altogether, but it was rejected by Governor Bryan.

The veto was part of actions taken by the governor on over a dozen bills, most of which Mr. Bryan signed into law, according to a release issued by the administration Tuesday.

In his transmittal letter to Senate President Donna Frett-Gregory, Mr. Bryan said he vetoed Bill No. 34-0186 (formerly Bill No. 34-0168) because it is an attempt to establish an exemption for one casino owner in Downtown Christiansted and subverts a pending matter before the Casino Control Commission and the Virgin Islands Superior Court.

The governor also blasted Mr. Violet in the transmittal letter. "The bill sponsor's strong advocacy in the media for VIGL Operations, the casino owner, and VIGL's plans, which are to be affected by the legislation is strongly indicative of the bill being "special interest legislation," he wrote.

"Using legislation such as Bill Nos. 34-0168 and 34-0186 as special interest efforts to influence the outcome of a matter pending before the Superior Court of the Virgin Islands in favor of one party is not only a violation of the Revised Organic Act as a special interest bill but also is a violation of the Separation of Power Doctrine," Governor Bryan noted in his transmittal letter.

"As the Casino Control Commission is charged with regulating casino license applicants and holders, the Legislature should consider giving the Commission the authority to waive or modify conditions and add other conditions it deems appropriate to the applicant or license-holder," the governor wrote.

Among the bills the governor signed is a measure repealing the requirement that a woman take her husband's surname (Bill No. 34-0035); a bill expanding the definition of a hotelkeeper or innkeeper for purposes of persons required to remit hotel room taxes (Bill No. 34-0070); legislation amending the tenure of Assistant Attorneys General within the Virgin Islands Department of Justice (Bill No. 34-0107); and a measure relating to school truancy, to provide procedures for dealing with unexcused absences from school (Bill No. 34-0144).

Mr. Bryan also said he approved Bill No. 34-0173, which allows for the restoration of the 8 percent salary cuts to employees of the University of the Virgin Islands and also amends exemptions regarding the Gasoline Station Moratorium, but that he exercised his line item veto on a section of the measure.

"An additional 'blanket' exemption was added as a new Section 5 to Act 8442 without any governing parameters for its application. This additional 'blanket' exemption does not relate back to the Gasoline Station Moratorium and unreasonably forbids any department or agency from denying any license, permit or approval, regardless of whether the gas station meets all the other critical requirements for approval of said licenses or permits, such as the Certificate of Good Standing or the fire inspection, among others," the governor wrote.
