An injured loggerhead sea turtle was rescued by volunteers from the Sea Turtle Assistance and Rescue (STAR) network on March 24 in collaboration with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Division of Fish and Wildlife of the VI Department of Planning and Natural Resources, and Coral World Ocean and Reef Initiative (CWORI), according to a release from Coral World.

The turtle was first spotted at the Frederiksted Pier on St Croix in late February. Experts from the Animal Welfare Center on St. Croix, who were monitoring her recovery, determined after four weeks that she was not progressing as well as hoped.

On March 25, QE4 Ferry Service transported her to St Thomas where STAR volunteers drove her to Coral World Ocean Park. There CWORI Rehabilitation Manager Erica Palmer took charge. "We gave this young female turtle antibiotics, pain medications, anti-inflammatories as well as fluid therapy. Based on x-rays and ultrasound images we determined that the injuries were caused by a shark attack," Ms. Palmer said.

According to the release, the turtle, which weighs 93 pounds, is receiving medical grade honey therapy in addition to normal wound care. "Her blood values are positive, and she is already eating. All very positive signs and even though she is missing 80% of her right front flipper, she will still be releasable if she continues to do well and heals appropriately," Ms. Palmer added.

Claudia Lombard of STAR, stated, "Like all sea turtle species, Loggerhead sea turtles, like all other sea turtles, are protected by the Endangered Species Act. By-catch in commercial fisheries, loss of nesting habitat due to coastal development, and historical harvest of sea turtle meat and eggs have all played a part in the decline of this species."

The release says all sea turtles are designated as either threatened or endangered under the U.S. Endangered Species Act of 1973. Violations can result in up to one year in prison, up to a $100,000 fine, and the confiscation of any equipment used during the criminal act.

"STAR relies on many community volunteers, local veterinarians, and other donated resources like those offered by Coral World Ocean Park, but the most important participant in STAR is you," Ms. Palmer emphasized.

Individuals are asked to report any entrapped, disoriented, sick, injured, or dead sea turtle by calling the rescue hotline at (340) 690-0474. You can find out more about STAR at STAR-Sea Turtle Assistance and Rescue.

Coral World Ocean Park is the only approved Sea Turtle Rehabilitation Facility in the Virgin Islands. Rescue and rehabilitation is now conducted and funded through Coral World Ocean and Reef Initiative. Donations are welcome.
