The concert series, dubbed RCA Sessions, will launch as a live streaming event on Thursday, March 18, at 7 p.m. featuring local reggae band Dub Lab. Concert viewers will enjoy bi-monthly performances by local performing artists who are encouraged to explore their creativity and develop works that exemplify their art form.

"We are very excited to present this project which was initially slated for a live audience in 2017," said Denise Humphrey, director of the Reichhold Center. "The original concept was based on the success of student performances that occurred before our main stage acts," she explained. "We were inspired to revisit the project after successfully collaborating with the VI Council on the Arts last October to facilitate the presentation of the SHUT Down Band and Macislyn Bamboula Dance Company for the Kennedy Center: Arts Across America programming."

Though performance arts are the foundation of this project, Humphrey noted that her team has developed some creative ideas on ways to include other artistic disciplines. "We plan to add a unique spin on the development of the art as it unfolds live on the stream," she said. The creative minds behind RCA Sessions include Dionne Donadelle, Anthony Nibbs, Luben Daniel, and Tasida Kelch, along with the Reichhold Team; Marcus Daniel, Feja Lima and Jae Knight, according to the release.

While the Reichhold Center continues to rebuild following damage caused by the 2017 hurricanes, viewers can catch the premiere episode of RCA Sessions on Reichhold Center's webpage, www.uvi.edu/reichhold/#Home. The event is also part of UVI's "Back the Bucs Week", a week-long fundraising effort to support scholarships and programs at UVI. For more event details, and for information on how to become a guest artist on RCA Sessions, contact Denise Humphrey at (340)693-1552 or dhumphr@uvi.edu.
